CAMPAIGN UPVE

Now that the campaign for the Democratic nomination is over and we hasten to congratulate the winner, let us note the fact that once again Appomattox County cast a fine vote and interest in public affairs received impetus as a result of the campaign. It is well for important offices to be contested from time to time, to keep alive the interest of the citizen in his government. Sometimes campaigns feature smear charges and other tactics against the public interest, but by and large, a campaign is a wholesome thing.

Now let the ranks of the party be united in the support of a strong front for the November election.

STEPS TO INFLATION

From Ashland Herald-Progress

We take a great deal about the danger of inflation but few of us seem to be really worried about it. Everything that increases the spending power of the country in these days of shortages or increases the cost of things above their value or adds to demand for our goods and services is inflationary. The fact that Britain is so much more inflationary than we are is not a matter of mere statistics. It is a matter of fact. The proposed O.P.A. is inflationary. The proposed removal of pay for enlisted men and bonuses for veterans is inflationary. Proposals for large expenditures for Army and Navy construction and continued peacetime government payrolls are inflationary.

SPORTS-MINDED!

From Eastern Shore News

Attendance in the baseball parks of cities all over the country has jumped to new high this season. New leagues have sprung up all sections of the country. Even attendance in Pennsylvania has picked up. Indications point to the best college football year since the beginning of the war this fall and game tickets are being bought up months in advance. Despite inflation, the strikes, and other fluctuating values in the American life, sports remain one of the most reliable of the people in this country. The difference between the average American boy and those of numerous other countries, less sports-minded, were evidenced decisively in the war. A healthy, exercised body pays bigger dividends with the smallest cost of any investment we know.

THE ATOM AS CURE AND DISEASE

From New York Times

The only defense an individual has against an atomic bomb is not to be there when one goes off. The only strategic defense is the "wide spacing" of ships and shore installations. The only security or safety for the peoples of the world is the elimination of war as a means of settling differences among nations. Such in brief are the conclusions to be drawn from the report of the civilian commission, headed by Senator Carl A. Hatch of New Mexico and will be released Friday on the first test at Bikini. No comfort is to be derived from the accompanying report of the evaluation board of the Army-Navy Joint Chiefs of Staff, with its reference to "contaminated ships" which became "radioactive" and would have burned all living things aboard them with invisible and painless but deadly radiation. The layman must have a sick feeling at the thought of contaminating the subject in terms of "military and naval design" and "strategy and tactics" though this of course, it was the board's duty to do. A fine and perhaps intentional irony in these reports were made public on the very day when the Government made its first sale of radioactive isotopes to a private institution for use in medical

White Wash

Ever since you saw Lana Turner's sizzling white wardrobe in "The Postman Always Rings Twice" you've been going around like a sleigh ride in July. And nothing could be more synonymous with your coat of tan. After all, what's Lana got that you haven't got? Sorry, we can't give you the answer in this limited space.

Guid the Light—Make yourself a pure white cotton dural. Wear it with a white off-shoulder peasant blouse. Cinch your waistline.

White Heat—Top your white shorts with a white T-shirt. Wear it with a white T-shirt. Wear it with a white T-shirt.

High Lights—Even your accessories have gone white. You're plugging your hair with white. You're plugging your hair with white.

Flicker Fashions—You're even wearing your white. You're even wearing your white.

Play the Game. It's a new one and it's called "Sunny Pinks." We haven't time to describe it in detail, so let's just start to play. If you don't get the drift, we'll show again.

We ask, "What is a capable girl?" You answer, "Able Sable." (See it has to rhyme.)

We ask, "What is an experienced vegetable?" You answer (if you're as smart as we think you are)—"A green bean."

We ask, "What is a sad foot?" You answer (if you're not tired of the whole thing)—"Blue shoes."

When you think of some other Sunny Pinks please let us know.

TAKE MY WORD FOR IT!

Handbook of PRACTICAL ENGLISH
Fifty Miss Gorman Remington, peering at her shorthand notes in despair, wails, "Oh, why did they ever have to invent such fiendish words as 'affect' and 'effect'! I never knew which one to use!"

Why doesn't she ask her employer whether he dictated "affect" or "effect"? She'll be more in the dark than she is. But cheer up, here's your Uncle Pancho with a simple key by means of which you may select the proper word instantly. The key lies in the initial letter "a" and "e" of effect and affect thus:

Affect is a verb only. It means: to act on.

To Assume
To Execute (to bring about)
The noun means: an Execution (that which is brought about)

An Eventually (consequence)
Key: When any "a" word makes sense, use affect; when any "e" word makes sense, use effect.

Radio broadcast: The word "effect" was pronounced "NEV." Why?—L. T.

Answer: The pronunciation "NEV" is a Britishism which was once common in some parts of America. It is now obsolete in U. S.

Nashville: Our Spanish class would like to know how "learn by heart" originated.—H. P.

Answer: The heart was once supposed to be the seat of the conscious spirit or soul; hence, the intellect: the mind.
